Gender

- On the whole, it shows an upward trend year by year recently.
- The number of female victims is much higher than that of male victims, almost twice.

- With the exception of sexual assault and kidnapping, the majority of victims are men.
- The vast majority of cases are sexual assaults.
- The number of robberies among the remaining crime categories is also considerable. (Including both armed and unarmed)
- Possible reasons:
 - Women generally have stronger safety awareness
 - Women are less likely to be seen alone at night in areas where they are likely to be robbed

According to statistics of gender-specific crimes in various countries, male victims are the majority in almost all crimes except for sex-related crimes in which more women are victims.

Take sexual assault, female victims of sexual assault make up a very high proportion of total female victims.

- Rate is calculated by victim number divided by 100,000 persons.
- Show an upward pattern over years.
- Higher than 0.15% in recent years which means 3 out of every 2,000 people have been sexually assaulted.
- Possible reasons:
 - Women are physically vulnerable
 - Men are more sexually impulsive
 - Many women may choose not to report the crime
 - relationship to the offender
 - confidence in the justice system
 - fear of revenge
 - public opinion

ABS personal safety survey also measures the number of women who contacted the police about the most recent incident within the last 10 years. Only 13.4% of women did so.
